DESIGNER AUDIO Brings Scansonic To India

Scansonic R2

WITH SOME PREMIUM HI-FI BRANDS under its belt, Mumbai-based Designer Audio has recently announced the addition of one more brand to their repertoire, Scansonic, a premium lifestyle audio equipment brand from Denmark. From the comprehensive list of product categories by Scansonic, which includes speakers, radios and hi-fi components, Designer

Audio will be distributing the company's speakers and radios in the country.

Taking you back on a stroll to the yesteryears, Scansonic radios make up for a classy solution to enjoy the good old radio but with a unique modern twist. For instance, their R2 is the series of solid and reliable FM radio. A wooden cabinet is home to this radio while the high quality tuner brings many of the weakest stations to life. When turning on the R2, a cool blue light will surround the tuning knob, and the radio is ready to deliver a great experience and like all Scansonic radios, the R2 table radio is compatible with iPod and other players. It is available in four finishes—black, red, leather, white and walnut. The next series, R4, is an internet radio and a technical wonder. A nice aluminum rotary wheel will give you the control of 15,000 plus radio stations from all over the world.

The R4 allows you to tune in to your favourite Australian classic music station, pop music from London or any specialty radio station from any location in the world in its own language, and in real time. It also allows you access to music stored on your PCs from anywhere in the house through your wireless or Ethernet connection.

Steven's Story Behind "It Feels So Good"

Aerosmith lead singer Steven Tyler who released the single "It Feels So Good" as a solo, recently spoke about how he'd originally decided to put the track on the Aerosmith album. In fact, since the band didn't like the song, he decided to launch the song as a separate solo on Ryan Seacrest's radio show.
